Three school campuses know how to Celebrate Kindness. Their students are the winners in the anti-bullying art contest.

Burleson Municipal Court and Mayor's Youth Council teamed up to encourage children from kindergarten up to seniors to refrain from name calling and bullying and to express their feelings through art. The contest - posters, drawings, paintings, and video – was open to all youth who live in Johnson County, including all Burleson youth who live in Tarrant County.

The winners include:

- 10th grade – Stephanie Lee, Burleson High School
- 6th grade – Kennedy Easter, first place; Kenzie Ward, second; and Macy McCoy, third (all from North Joshua Elementary)
- 5th grade – Holley Whitt, first place; Katy Pena, second; and Kelsea Moore, third (all from Hajek Elementary)
- 4th grade – Grace Slater, first place; Averie Riddle, second; and Emilee Johnson, third (all from Hajek Elementary)
- 3rd grade – Kameron Fletcher, first place (Hajek); Skylar Hutto, second (Hajek); and Lexa Noffsinger, third. (all from Hajek)

Children, kindergarten-second grade and third grade-fifth grade, submitted drawings. Students in sixth-eighth grade and freshmen-seniors could draw, paint or create a video. Entries in all categories were judged on creativity, neatness and originality.

Cheering on the winners were Constance White, director of court services; City Marshals Terry Hambley and CaShan Clark; Councilmember Ronnie Johnson; Special Projects Manager Jesse Elizondo; Mayor's Youth Council President Elisabeth White; and Community Resource Officer David Wardlaw.
